One in 3 teenagers report knowing a friend or peer who has been hit, punched, kicked, slapped, choked or physically hurt by a dating partner.

One in 3 adolescents in the U.S. is a victim of physical, sexual, emotional or verbal abuse from a dating partner.

Nearly 1 in 5 teens in a relationship say their partner has used a cell phone or the internet to spread rumors about them.

In a study of gay, lesbian and bisexual adolescents, youth involved in same sex dating are just as likely to experience dating violence as youth involved in opposite sex dating.

Honesty and Accountability
Both partners accept responsibility for their own actions and admit when they have made a mistake.

Connecting with Others
Both partners continue to connect with friends and family and enjoy different activities outside of their relationship.

Trust, Support and Respect
Both partners value each other’s life experiences and are comfortable expressing opinions and decisions.

Financial Independence
Both partners are responsible for their own money and do not expect gifts or presents from one another.

Sexual Boundaries
Both partners are able to say “no” to any type of sexual behavior and know that their partner will respect their decision.

Feeling Safe
Both partners feel safe spending time together and with the activities they choose to do together.

Equality
Both partners have equal decision-making power and are willing to compromise.

Controlling Behavior
One partner makes all the decisions in the relationship and their mood often guides how the day will go. They may try to control things like what their partner wears or try to pressure their partner into giving them all their passwords.

Sexual Abuse
One partner often criticizes the other’s body and manipulates situations so that they are afraid to say no. They may send or pressure the other person to send explicit pictures or videos.

Intimidation and Threats
One partner uses certain looks, actions, gestures, or voices to get what they want. In severe cases, they may threaten to commit suicide if the other person breaks up with them.

Isolation
One partner controls who the other partner is friends with or where they go. They may tell their partner who they can and can’t be friends with in-person or online.

Denying, Minimizing, and Blaming
One partner denies that their behavior is harmful or acts like what they are doing is not that serious.

Financial Abuse
One partner expects the other to always pay for dates or to buy things for them.

Emotional/Verbal Abuse
One partner constantly criticizes, name calls, puts downs or embarrasses the other privately or in front of friends. They may put them down in status updates or spread rumors on social media.

Stalking
One partner calls, texts or uses social media numerous times a day to “check in” on what the other is doing and who they are with.

Physical Abuse
One partner hits, slaps, pushes, chokes, or grabs the other to intimidate or hurt them.

Extreme Jealousy
One partner constantly accuses the other of cheating when they want to hang out independently, or be with other friends.

How to Help a Friend
Encourage them to seek help by connecting them with a trusted adult - a parent, school counselor, teacher, or family friend. Listen and believe without judgment. Ask respectful questions to let your friend know you are concerned and that it is not their fault. Recognize that your friend may minimize what is happening or deny they are being abused. Be patient - it is not easy to end a relationship. Support your friend, even if they go back. It takes an average of six times to successfully leave an abusive relationship. Support your friend’s strengths and courage in the decisions they are making to be safe.

How to Help Yourself
Recognize that your partner’s actions and behaviors are not your fault. Trust your instincts - if you feel uncomfortable or unsafe, seek help immediately. Use caution, as violence could increase when ending an abusive relationship. Consider meeting with an advocate to create a safety plan. Connect with resources at home, in your school or in the community - a counselor, teacher, parent, advocate or a crisis line (see the back of this brochure for specific resources). Remember that abuse can take many forms. Verbal and emotional abuse can be just as hurtful as physical or sexual abuse. You deserve to be treated with respect and dignity.
